For me, and on account of what some of my best students say, is that the library gives the student researcher a feeling of timeless connectivity to exploring avenues of ideas. Unlike the internet, where one gets a fly-by-night sense attached to the searching and processing of new (and old) knowledge. And librarians represent the bridge between the one who wants to know and those who knew, as well as being someone who also wants to know.